

COMING UP AT
Old Town School of Folk Music
BRUCE COCKBURN
 FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 3 8PM
 SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4 8PM
 MAURER HALL · 4544 N LINCOLN AVE
 BUY TICK ▶

Newsletters Donate 🔍

- NEWS ▾ CITY LIFE ▾ COLUMNS & OPINION ▾ MUSIC ▾ ARTS & CULTURE ▾ FILM ▾ FOOD & DRINK ▾ READER ▾
- > Latest issue UnGala Celebration The People Issue Best of Chicago 2022 Contests Reader Updates Reader Store En español Advertise

Home > Soft light

ARTS & CULTURE

Soft light

Scott Wolniak's hallucinatory, layered paintings

by Alan Pocar
 October 11, 2023

Installation view, Scott Wolniak "Crosscurrents" at Goldfinch, 2023
 Credit: Ryan Edmund

The UnGala is back! Click here for the ticket link for this year's celebration at Epiphany Center for the Arts on Oct. 18.

Painter Scott Wolniak's delightful new exhibition "Crosscurrents" at Goldfinch is a lot to take in. With nearly 20 works of various sizes hung close together in the modest space, the exhibition is like a salon-style dive into the visual deep. Viewers used to sparse white walls and serious square footage between works might find the scale and volume of the artist's colorful and inviting abstractions similar to an eye exam. My advice: look closely, squint, step back, repeat.

Wolniak's touch is spare and light-handed despite regularly combing three or more materials on his work's surfaces. Even when teeming with pumice, oil, acrylic, and dry pastel, his paintings never rise up into garish moments of easy impasto. And when they do break the fourth wall, it's subtle and subdued, like the eerie flicker of firefly yellow in the noctiluent Seeing with Eyes Closed

RECOMMENDED IN ARTS & CULTURE

Lucha Teotl brings bodyslamming storytelling

Credit: Ryan Edmund

One of the most compelling aspects of Wolniak’s painting is the beguiling way in which his all-over compositions (a formal strategy that typically affirms the surface of the support) seem to stretch out, open up wide, and fall back into space. The peach-hued Listening ripples, radiates, and respires, shimmering with air that is dappled with the transcendental light of the Pacific Northwest or Lake Michigan just after dawn. A spectral realm between dreaming and waking, these crosscurrents are worlds to wander and lose yourself in.

“Crosscurrents”
Through 10/21: Fri-Sat noon-4 PM, Goldfinch, 319 N. Albany, goldfinch-gallery.com

Old Town School of Folk Music
Your Musical Adventure Begins Here!
Get Started

to the Goodman

The Destinos show melds Aztec gods and lucha libre in a high-octane and thoughtful production.

by Kimzyn Campbell October 11, 2023

Peter Malmö gives a Wisconsin makeover to Pedro Páramo

Colectivo El Pozo and Akvavit Theatre reimagine the Latin American classic for this year’s Destinos festival.

by Alejandro A. Riera October 11, 2023

RECOMMENDED IN FILM

Review: Eric LaRue

Grief and guilt in the aftermath of a school shooting; playing Fri 10/13 at CIFF

by Kerry Reid October 12, 2023

Review: Chasing Chasing Amy

Look back at the 1997 film Chasing Amy through a new queer lens in this thoughtful documentary.

by Becca James September 22, 2023

CONCERT PREVIEWS

Draag Me’s warped pop feels like a roller-coaster you’re not tall enough to ride

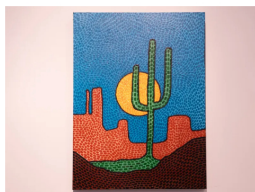

by Leor Galil October 10, 2023

Genesis Owusu makes ugly, beautiful funk for freedom

by Noah Berlatsky October 6, 2023

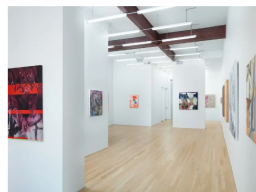

PLAY WITH PURPOSE
LEARN MORE
TICKET FOR THE CURE
WIN $50,000

RELATED STORIES

Homeward bound

Fleurette Estes’s “Kéyah: Paintings and Photographs of Home” at the American Indian Center is a potent

Contrasts and connections

After the velvet curtains close on glistening spring art fairs and innumerable MFA shows, summer’s strange pitch descends.

Free from affect

Atlanta-based painter Patrick Eugène’s first solo show with Mariane Ibrahim is a beautiful and affecting reflection on the

COMING UP AT Old Town School of Folk Music
BRUCE COCKBURN
FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 3 8PM
SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4 8PM
MAURER HALL - 4544 N LINCOLN AVE

REMY BUMPO
BLUES FOR AN ALABAMA